Again the face is washed and veivety softness and a youthful bloom is the result. The cup and brush that do such effective service are to be found both in delicate china and silver, the latter, however, being the more popular. Even though a woman may be averse to such beneficial results accruing from the use of the little brush will soon overcome any prejudice on the score of its masculimity that she may entertain. - Philadel-

Something New to Eat. A new vegetable is about to be intro-duced to the people of the United States, through the department of agriculture. It is the root of the calla lily, which resembles somewhat in appearance the ordinary Irish tuber, with the addition of a few whiskers that have nothing to of a few whiskers that have nothing to do with the qualities of the article as an esculent. It is more elongated, and when cut the interior is triffe more viscid. But a section of it is so potato-like you would not be likely to dis-tinguish any difference. In cooking, it has first to be boiled in order to destroy certain acid properties, after which it may be fried, roasted, baked, or what not, according to taste. Farmers in Florida have begun to raise these calla roots for market. The plants grow readily in swamps and so thickly that the yield of a single flooded thickly that the yield of a single flooled acre is enormous. They reproduce themselves by the multiplication of their buils under ground, so that the grower has simply to dig up the off shoots and leave the parents to propagate anew. For centuries the Egyptians have cultivated the control of the control o tivated a similar crop during the seasons of the Nile overflow, and at the present time calla his bulbs are a common vegetable in Japanese markets. So prolific and palatable are they that their propagation in many parts of the United States, where conditions are favorable, may reasonably be looked forward to as an agricultural industry of the future.

The newest center pieces are of old Dutch silver with branches of three candelabra at either end. They are not more than from ten to twelve inches in height, and are far more useful than the higher ones that have been in vogue so long. The branches spring from the ting in the top and the silver is oxidized to give it the hue of antique silver. When supplied with shaded candles they light the table very effectively without being unpleasant to the eyes.

It was then devicted.

From that time, under the different titles of "Pulace of the Council of the Pive Hundred," "Pulace of the Legislative Corps" and "Chamber of Deputies," It has always remained consented to the service of the people's representa-

From time to time such improvements as accoming would permit were under, but it was not until 1807, under Nagolson I, that the grand staircase, surmounted by the portal facing the Place de la Concerde, familiar to all visitors to Puris, was constructed. Then it was also that the coloural statues of Justice and Prudence, Sully, Cofbert, L'Hopital and D'Aguemens were placed where they now stand. These statues, by the bye, which look like marble, are in reality made of stone and covered with a conting of white glace.

Under Napolson I the building was at first called the "Pulace of the Legislative Corps," and the depaties were brilliant uniforms. This caused a writer of the time to say, "He gave the depaties a brilliant costume, embrodered with gold, and at the same time withdrew their right of free speech."

It was in 1814 that the name was changed to that the building bears to-

It was in 1814 that the name was changed to that the building bears to-day, "Palace of the Chamber of Departies," or, as it is more generally called now, "Chamber of Departies." But if the legislators of the year of grace 1868 do not wear gold embroidered uniforms there still remains in their ceremonies a good deal of the pomp and ceremony which usually appertain to monarchies.

The president of the chamber lives in a mansion on the Quai d'Orsay, the grounds of which join these surrounding the chamber of deputies. Before the opening of each sitting be is escorted through the long Salle des Pas Perdus (reserved for the use of members of parliament and journalists) by a detachment of infantry in command of a captain. The drums best, and the procession is preceded by a gorgeously attired usher, who announces, "Monsieur le President." usher, who announces, President."

usher, who announces, "Monsieur le President."

Thus escorted, the president mounts his seat, high above the tribune from which the members speak, and immediately there is a noise of members acrambling to their seats, like schoolboys afraid of being marked late. This part of the proceedings is about as undignified as the entrance of the president is imposing. After tapping his deak with a large paper knife, or in case of much noise ringing a brass bell, the president declares the sitting open, and a relative silence is established for a moment. The formal business of reading the minutes of the last sitting is gone through, and then the discussion upon the question of the day begins. When unimportant, everybody who is not engaged in letter writing talks. When the question before the house is of interest, silence is maintained until somebody sets the example of interrupting or perhaps insulting the speaker.

Then the scene is one which has often been described by clever writers and artists, but which must be seen to be appreciated. The ushers inside the chamber, who wear evening dress, white ties and swords, have frequently to come between excited deputies, who, but for their intervention, would often come to blows.

These ushers form in reality the most conservative part of the assembly, for they, with few exceptions, grow old in conservative part of the seembly, for they, with few exceptions, grow old in the service. They are almost as familiar with the rules of the house as the presi-dent himself, and they regard newly elected members very much as an usher in a public school regards a new boy. They know that every deputy drinks while speaking, and one of them is espe-cially told off to order from the buffet the particular beverage with which a speaker is wont to moist at his parched lips during a heated debatd.

It is upon these occasions that the French chamber treats the world to some of those surprises "which no fellow can understand." What is called in France le petit jeu des combinations is played, and often a government major-ity of today is turned into a minority to-

The fact is, that the majority of the deputies are men who would be loath to lose their pay of 25 france per day and the honors attached to the post of representative of the people. That is why the fear of dissolution often induces them to give a ministry a majority rather than provoke its overthrow and the crisis con-

Two ministerial portfolios are especially coveted—those of the interior and finance—for besides the importance of the posts there is an ancient custom in connection with them. The day after the acceptance of the portfolio one of the grave, white necktied, sword bearing nahers calls upon each minister and es calls upon each minister and hands him an envelope containing 60,000 france for frais de deplacement, or moving expenses. If he retains his portfolio but a single day, he never returns the $12,000, nor is he expected to.—New York Sun.

Ancient Superstitions

Omens and superstitions have their origin in the belief suggested to primitive man that the elements and every-thing pertaining to creation had souls and intelligence. This belief is found among the ancient Aryans, the Romans, the Celts, the Teutons, the Arabians, the Chinese, the American Indians and in fact, in every nation. That human natur is the sarge the world over and at all times is shown by the analogy existing between early mythology, the source from which the superstitions of the pre-ent day are derived.—New York Tele-
